for the possessors of the kitchen mound: they served in all cases, and accordingly that time was a period of complete ignorance of metals. This ignorance of metals, absence of signs of agriculture, handware of pottery, and absence of perfection in instruments, lead us to suppose that the mun of the kitchen mounds stood at a very low degree of culture. The lower culture of man generally precedes that of the higher. In 1885 proofs were found testify. ing to higher online in those reigions nearly eight hundred years back, by the diggings of Mr. Busse in Nicolskoe, where iron and clay instruments were found. But proof is not confined to one instance. Owing to the labours of Messra. Shaveloff and Michailofsky in deciphering the inscriptions, the densety to which those memorials belinged was successfully ascertained,-viz., the dynasty of Hin, which reigned in Manchurit from 1115 to 1237. A.D. Earlier still there existed a Manchu kingdom Bobai. of which Mr Gorske says. "The Bohai was one of the most flourishing kingdoms on the const f the Eastern Sea." Had the man of the kitchen remains, which were found on the Taudofsky peninsular, lived during the Bonei sivilisation, he would have been separated from us by a period of 1,200 years. But it is diffiguit to suppose that the man in face of his civilisation would remain true to his weapons. I think that the man of the kitchen mounds did not know such neighbours, not only in disregarding them, but that such neighbours did not exist at all then. Pherefore be lived before the epoch of Bohsi. The Right Rev. Falladino, in one of his letters to the Geographical Society, says that in some parts of the South Ussuri district, or to say more clearly in Manchuria, the stone period lasted till the eleventh century. It seems to me that this could have referred only to those which were not touched by Manchu civilisation. The place where the kitchen mounds were found is surrounded by memorials of higher culture. even higher than that of Bohai; therefore it seems that the remains should be ascribed to a pariod pravious to the time of Bohai. - N. TOURANE AND HUE:

The bay of Tourans is a large land-locked arm of the see. about twenty-four hour steaming from Haiphong : the entrance is very striking ; lofty mountains at no great distance bounding the view on the tip of this peninsula is an apology for a light-house. The bay, though spacious, is not available as an anchorage for large steamers, except at this one spot, but even this spot is capacious enough to harbour a good-sized fleet. The rest of the bay is shallow, and even small steam-lannches often have a difficulty in threading their way along the channel from the town to the steamer. Tourane is not strong in steam launobes; in fact the Messageries Company has no launch anywhere north of Suigon. The hotel sends out a small and somewhat top-heavy steamlaunch to require the mails and passengers; but Supplementary to Dr. Macgowan's not on the most comfortable way, and, if there is the fain-Recent Russian Archaic Researches" adjacent | test breeze the most expeditions, is to land in a nu-Society, and on the means provided by Mr. remain to be done, whilst the lighting of the

The Julyrains of Angkor, Djokdjokarta, Quinhon and Kwang-nam all tell the same tale, and the Sawe Dagoun Pagoda at Ranguon, though now Buddhistic, was purhaps originally tarred with the same religious brush, when the Talaings or Mouns reigned in Pegu. Spacious barracks have, within very recent years, been constructed for the French troops at Tourane ; a few planters have started coffee and other plantations in the neighbourhood, and the Bank of Indo-China has just opened an agency there. Tourane, in short, n the absence of a past or a brilliant present. has a future, and perhaps the most hopeful part of it is the much-to-be-desired total abolition of the customs, which now throttles trade for a very inadequate consideration. Visitors who are enterprising enough to go up to the coal mines may at least spend an afternoon in visiting the Marble Caves, which jut straight out of the sand, like those of Shao king-Fu, in the Canton province of China. But they are much larger, and one of thom resembles in a measure the Jevolan Caves of the Sydney Blue Mountains. Many people fail togo to places simply because they do not know how to set about it. All von have to do, then, is to hire the first untive sampan you see, say nothing about the price, and point to the montagnes de marbre which are always easily visible. It takes two hours to get there easily. You land at a. spot a mile distant from the caves, and walk past a village or two over a saudy beach. The best way, when you approach the mountains, is not to mount the sandy slope which covers the steps leading up to the great cave. but to walk on a quarter of a mile further round the corner, and enter by the monastery called in the local Annamesa Non nun tua. Here you have comfortable steps to go up: you get several views at resting places on the way and you see the inferior caves first, reserving the hest for the last; and besides, you run down the bank of sand when you have fluished, instead of toiling up it before you begin. The chief cave contains a small temple, built by the Emporor Thien tri in the year 1843. It is just as well not to disappoint the poor people about. Two or three five or ten cent pieces, distributed among the ragged archites who volunteer as guides, and the bonzes who proffer cups of wishy-washy tos, are a very small price to pay compared with the greedy tips exacted on similar eccasions in Europe. When you get back, if Brown & Co., H. If you have not, then sleep in your bost, which, in that mild climate, is good enough for any man. Kwang-nam city or citadel is half a mile from the river: it is a citadel constructed on the Vanban principle, and is interesting as being a specimen town. The Clam remains are on the other wide of the river, two miles up it from the same mooring. Autiquarians will find them well worth a visit. The Tourane boatman will be content with from half-a-dollar to a dollar for the trip to K wang-nam, according to the circumstances of wind and tide. Where prices are so low, and the people so inoffensive and helploss travellers are recommended not to gradge a mis wahle sixpence, and not to hector and hully as many Europeans are inclined to do. With a fair wind from Kwang-nam, you can go up to the coal-mines of Nong-son in eighteen hours; the scenery is agreeable, and, towards the end. exquisito. The coal-mines themselves are beautifully situated, and M. Bouverie, the acting manager, is hospitality itself to any one who shows that he is not undeserving of it, and is willing to make hippedif agreeable. The coal-mines of Nong-son differ in no material respect from those of Nagara in the Bay of Along, but the working #ppears to be more economical and the expenditure more prudent. They are a little more than a mile from the river.
